Travis Louie has always been a dreamer. Through the tiny drawings and notes in his journals, he's created an imaginary world of creatures rooted in Victorian and Edwardian times. A world inhabited by human oddities, mythical beings and otherworldly characters, it's presented in the style of film noir and German expressionist cinematography. The underlining thread that connects all these characters is the unusual circumstances that shape who they were and how they lived. Some of their origins are a complete mystery while others leave subtle cues: a man cursed by a goat; a strange, furry being discovered sleeping in a hedge; an engine driver who can't stop vibrating in his sleep, and so forth. With Spirits, Travis' newest collection of two- and three-dimensional works, he delves into the realm of the supernatural and his characters' curiosity with the dead ...

ARTIST BIO:

Travis Louie was born in Queens, NY, about a mile from the site of the 1964 World's Fair. His early childhood was spent drawing and watching "Atomic Age" sci-fi and horror movies. There were many Saturday afternoon trips to the local comics shop and noon matinees at the RKO Keith's cinema on Northern Blvd., where he marveled at the 1950s memorabilia: the rocket ships, the superheroes, the giant monsters, and old pulp art covers. He did thousands of sketches of genre characters like Godzilla, King Kong, and a host of creatures from Ray Harryhausen movies.

The visual style of his work is mostly influenced by the lighting and atmosphere of German Expressionist and Film Noir motion pictures from the Silent Era to the late 1950's. Films from directors like F W Murnau, Fritz Lang, Orson Welles, Robert Siodmak, Robert Aldrich, Jacque Tourneur, and cinematographer, Greg Toland, had a great effect on the way he wanted his paintings to look.

The influences for his work are many; the genre films, his fascination with human oddities, circus sideshows, old Vaudeville magic acts, Victorian portraits, and things otherworldly, are all blended together to enable him to bring life to the characters and stories he writes in his journals.
